WHY I TEACH

The first week of May is Teacher Appreciation week. We asked our teachers the fundamental question:
Why do you teach?

STEPHEN GLASSNER

- Because I want students with disabilities to believe in themselves, and also have the tools they need to receive a good education.

CARL HOOPER

- To feel like I'm spending my work time doing something that matters to people's real lives.

SEAN MURPHY

- I teach because I believe education informs and empowers individuals to make decisions that will have a positive impact for themselves, their community, and the world.

PERLA RODRIGUEZ-ARROYO

- I teach because there is no exact science behind how to teach subjects in a specific strategy. Teaching is all about being creative and working collaboratively with others who hold a different skill set to make learning more engaging.
- I teach because I want my students to love school and to enjoy learning just as much as I do. Academics may not be for everyone but finding that one person who can take a complex concept and simplify it into easy steps then get it is what makes this career worth it.

We are very fortunate to have such committed teachers on our staff! We celebrate them as well as all of our para professionals and specialists this week and every week of our school year.
